Program Description
The Southwestern College Professional Studies Master of Business Accountancy (MACC) learner may desire to work in one of several areas, including forensic accounting, auditing, tax preparation, preparing financial reporting for public and private companies, or, the learner may be working toward a controller or chief financial officer position. A learner could also choose to pursue a MACC for personal or professional growth and development outside of these areas. The MACC learner enters the program with considerable accounting, finance and economics coursework or equivalent accounting work experience.

The MACC curriculum is mapped to the four areas of the Uniform CPA Exam*: Auditing and Attestations, Financial Accounting and Reporting, Regulation, and Business Environment and Concepts. Essential skills for successfully completing the program include attention to detail, knowledge in word processing and spreadsheets, business procedures, mathematics and organizational communication skills. Learners develop skills in organizational budgeting, financial decision-making and ethical reasoning.

*The Uniform CPA Examination prepared by the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants (AICPA) is rigorous. Less than one-half of those who take it each year pass every part on the first try. Southwestern College can make no guarantee that successful completion of the MACC program will make a graduate eligible to sit for a licensure exam or to obtain state licensure. In each state there are specific policies that must be followed when an individual is seeking to become a licensed accountant. For information on the education requirements for your state, refers to the state’s Board of Accountancy or related agency. Even after completing the MACC graduate program, additional self-study and/or coursework may be necessary to realize success.
